Excerpt from Fury: A Near Future Thriller Forsaken Mercenary

Jack Fury stood at the edge of the ruins of what was once a great city. The buildings were crumbling, the streets were empty, and the only sound was the wind whistling through the broken windows.

Jack had seen a lot of destruction in his life, but nothing like this. The city had been ravaged by a war that had torn the world apart. The war had been fought over resources, over water, over food. And in the end, everyone had lost.

Jack took a deep breath and stepped into the ruins. He was on a mission to find a group of scientists who were working on a new technology that could potentially save the world. The scientists had been kidnapped by a ruthless warlord who wanted to use their technology for his own evil purposes.

Jack knew that the mission was dangerous, but he was the only one who could do it. He was a forsaken mercenary, a man with no loyalties and no regrets. He was the perfect man for the job.

Jack walked through the ruins, his boots crunching on the broken glass and rubble. He passed by the skeletons of buildings that had once been homes and businesses. He saw the graffiti that covered the walls, the words of a people who had lost hope.

Jack kept walking, his face set in a grim determination. He knew that the road ahead would be long and difficult, but he was not afraid. He was Jack Fury, a forsaken mercenary, and he was going to save the world.
