The Story

Gone with the Wind opens in the antebellum South, where Scarlett O'Hara is the spoiled and selfish daughter of a wealthy plantation owner. When the Civil War breaks out, Scarlett's world is turned upside down. Her father is killed, her home is burned, and she is forced to flee with her family to Atlanta. In Atlanta, Scarlett meets Rhett Butler, a dashing and enigmatic blockade runner. Despite their initial dislike for each other, Scarlett and Rhett eventually fall in love.

The war takes a heavy toll on Scarlett and Rhett. They both lose loved ones, and they face the challenges of poverty and hunger. However, through it all, their love for each other remains strong. After the war, Scarlett and Rhett return to Tara, Scarlett's family's plantation. However, their relationship is strained by Scarlett's selfishness and Rhett's inability to forgive her past mistakes. In the end, Rhett leaves Scarlett, and the novel ends with Scarlett vowing to win him back.

The Characters
