From her early days as a scuba diver, Widder was fascinated by the creatures that inhabited the underwater world. She quickly realized that there was much more to discover beyond the surface, and she set out to create new technologies that would allow her to explore the depths of the ocean.

In 1985, Widder co-founded the Ocean Research & Conservation Association (ORCA), a non-profit organization dedicated to promoting ocean exploration and conservation. Through ORCA, she developed innovative submersibles and cameras that allowed her to reach unprecedented depths and observe marine life in its natural habitat.

Widder's discoveries have revolutionized our understanding of the deep sea. She has identified new species of jellyfish, squid, and fish, and she has documented the behavior of these creatures in their natural environment. Her work has also helped us to better understand the impact of human activities on the ocean.

In addition to her scientific contributions, Widder is also a passionate advocate for ocean conservation. She has spoken out against overfishing, pollution, and climate change, and she has worked to inspire young people to pursue careers in science and exploration.

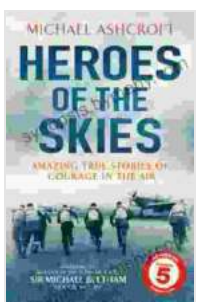

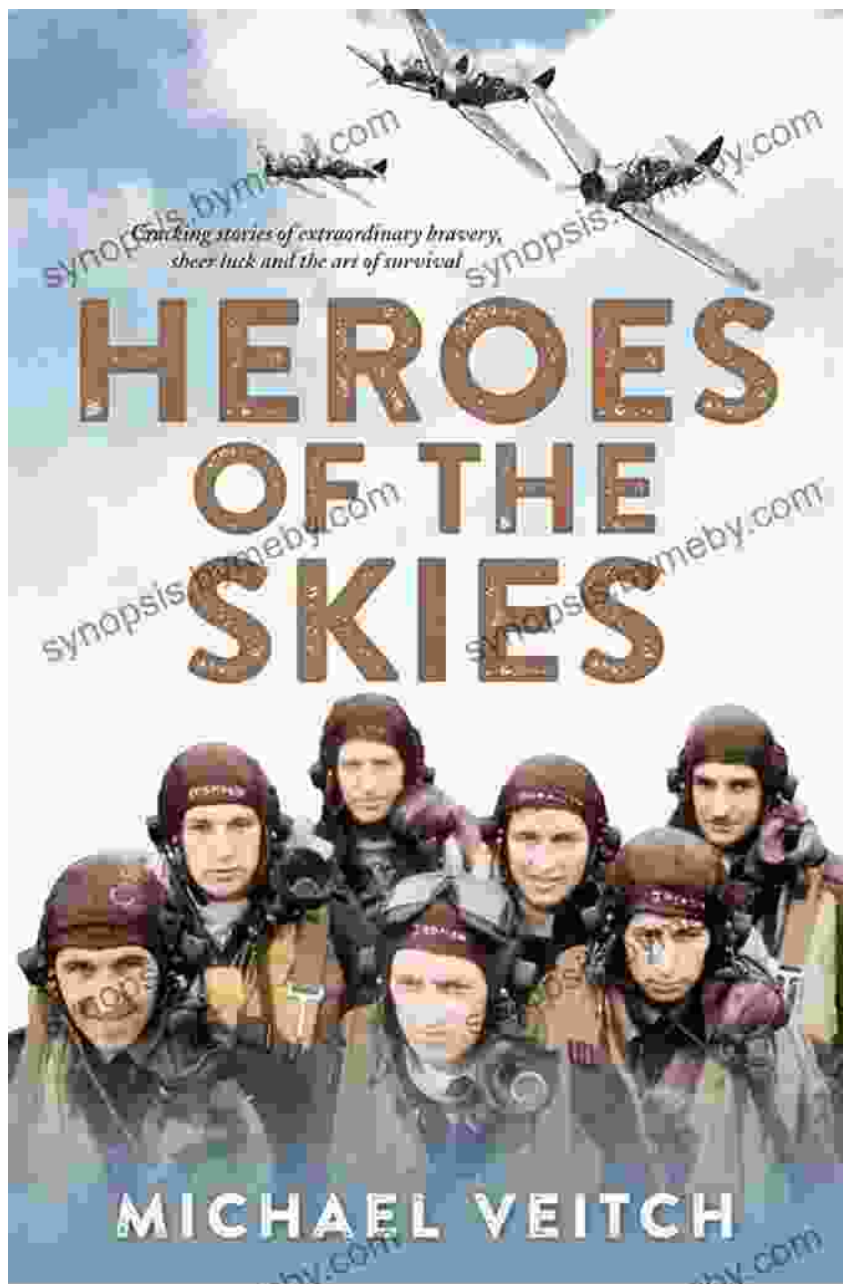

Dr. Edith Widder is a true pioneer in the field of marine biology. Her groundbreaking discoveries have expanded our knowledge of the deep sea and inspired countless others to pursue their dreams. She is a role model for scientists and explorers alike, and her work will continue to inspire generations to come.
